Program Objectives

After attending the program, the participant will:

- Achieve improved recognition and understanding of the physical properties of ultrasound contrast agents and their clinical applications.
- Describe the role of sonography in the assessment of the pediatric hip and hip dysplasia.
- Describe the current relationship of sonography and interventional radiology with identification and understanding of the newer technology such as GPS, elastography and contrast agents.
- Describe various vascular waveforms and velocities in visceral arteries and veins as well as the imaging protocols to help increase the sensitivity and accuracy of studies.
- Describe the normal appearance, color and spectral Doppler of peripheral arteries and explain the impact of stenosis, occlusion or cardiovascular devices on the spectral Doppler waveforms.
- Describe the role of ABI and PVR in detecting and quantifying peripheral arterial disease.
- Identify the sonographic features of benign and malignant adnexal masses.
- Describe the causes of first trimester bleeding and the sonographic findings.
